

SARK SOUL ISLAND RETREATS

Getting to Sark

The UK traveller's route to the Channel Islands' quietest island, and how to arrive unflustered.

YOGA & NATURE RETREATS · ISLE OF SARK

Closer than you think

Sark feels remote, with no cars for visitors, no street lighting and a pace that belongs to another century. Yet it is barely half a day from London. Here is the whole route, start to finish.

THE CROSSING FROM GUERNSEY, AROUND 55 MINUTES

Fly to Guernsey

Direct flights from London Gatwick take about an hour, with regional services from Southampton, Manchester, Bristol and others. Aurigny and British Airways are the main carriers. You can also fly to Jersey, but Guernsey is the simpler connection.

Get to St Peter Port

From Guernsey Airport it is a short taxi or bus ride into St Peter Port, Guernsey's harbour town. The Sark ferry leaves from the Inter Island Quay, a few minutes' walk from the town centre.

Take the ferry to Sark

The Isle of Sark Shipping Company runs the crossing year-round, roughly 55 minutes across open water with several sailings a day in season. It is a genuinely lovely passage, not a chore to endure.

Arrive at Maseline Harbour

There are no cars for visitors on Sark. A tractor-drawn toast rack carries you and your bags up the steep hill from the harbour, and from the village a horse and carriage takes you on to the farmhouse. The first sign you have arrived somewhere unlike anywhere else.

BOOK YOUR CROSSING

Sailing times shift with the season, so check the live timetable and book ahead at sarkshipping.gg. In summer there are several crossings daily; in winter the service runs most days but less often.

What day-trippers get wrong

Most people who visit Sark come for a few hours and leave before dusk. They see the lanes and the cliffs, but they miss the island entirely. A few things worth knowing before you come.

Don't rush the crossing

Build in time. The ferry connects to flights but does not wait for them, so give yourself a comfortable margin at St Peter Port rather than sprinting for the quay. Arriving calm is part of the point.

Pack light, and soft

With no cars, and a tractor for the hill, hard suitcases are awkward. A soft holdall or rucksack is far easier. You will need less than you think, as the island runs on layers, walking shoes and an open evening.

WORTH PACKING

- ✓ Layers, it is cooler by the sea
- ✓ A waterproof or windproof
- ✓ Swimwear, for the brave
- ✓ Any medication you need
- ✓ Proper walking shoes
- ✓ A torch for the lanes at night
- ✓ A refillable water bottle
- ✓ A book, you will have time

THE DARK SKY

Sark was the world's first Dark Sky Island. There is no street lighting, so nights are genuinely dark and the stars are extraordinary. Bring a small torch for walking back after dinner, then turn it off and look up. A note on connection: there is phone signal and wifi on Sark. The switching off here is not forced. It is that, after a day or two, you simply stop reaching for your phone, because there is something better to look at.

WHEN YOU COME TO US

Arriving for your retreat

THE LOGISTICS BECOME OURS

You don't have to work any of this out alone

Once you have booked, we send you a simple arrival plan: which sailing to aim for, where we meet you, and how your bags get to the farmhouse. Our retreats are hosted at our historic farmhouse, a gentle walk from the village. From the moment you step off the boat, the logistics become ours, not yours. That is rather the idea.

A TYPICAL ARRIVAL DAY

Most guests fly to Guernsey in the morning, take an early-afternoon ferry, and are settling into the house by late afternoon, in time to unpack, breathe, and gather for the first evening together.

OUR NEXT RETREAT

September 12 to 17, 2026

Five nights on the island, in a small group of ten to twelve guests. Places are limited, and the early-booking rate ends 19 July.
